

Find out what a typical day-in-the-life is like for Lip Jin.

What is a typical day in your life at Bank of America?

7:30 AM: Arrive at desk and review overnight U.S. news and market movements. Run risk for CDS and review positions/overnight orders for day ahead.

8:15 AM: Participate in the daily morning call with credit research, sales and syndicate. Give overview of yesterday's market movements, trading axes and general market trends.

8:30 – Noon: Market making duties for Asia (ex Japan). Follow related markets closely and react to news/events which would have a market impact. Phone calls with sales/research/clients to inform them about trading technicals, market direction and general trends.

Noon – 2:00 PM: Lunch at the desk. Includes impromptu/weekly meetings with colleagues to review trading positions, trading axes, weekly PnL and market direction for the week.

2:00 – 6:00 PM: PM trading session. London desk comes in. Make markets for London-based clients and keep an eye on European credit markets/equities which may drive activity in local markets.

6:00 – 8:00 PM: End of day activities: PnL wrap up, marking books, writing daily summaries and commentaries on market, leaving overnight orders for the NY desk.

What is your current assignment and primary responsibilities?

I am the primary market maker for HG corporates/banks in Singapore, and also assume market making/trading responsibilities for other HG/Sovereign corporates/banks when the primary trader is out. The Credit Trading desk in Hong Kong has a market making mandate for Asian corporate/sovereign bonds and CDS in the Asia ex-Japan region.
