

Find out what a typical day-in-the-life is like for Natasha.

What is a typical day in your life at Bank of America?

7:00 – 7:30 AM: Arrive at desk, check emails, and look for any relevant news flow about our companies.

7:30 – 8:00 AM: Morning call - this provides a platform for analysts to flag important information to our colleagues on the trading floor.

8:00 – 8:30 AM: Have more in-depth discussions with the sales force or the traders about any issues that could affect the share price of the companies we cover.

8:30 – 9:00 AM: Call clients to make them aware of any news and to have a chat on the stocks in which they are interested.

9:00 – 1:00 PM: Continue with client calls and/or client meetings. If a company has reported results, this time will also be spent writing a report, which should be published quickly.

1:00 – 4:30 PM: Carry on speaking to clients, writing research reports and working on the financial models of the companies. May have a conference call with the management of a company to discuss their business in more detail.

4:30 – 6:30 PM: This time tends to be a bit quieter so you can focus on the more complex writing and modelling.

6:30 – 7:00 PM: Finalise any reports so that they are ready to come out first thing in the morning and prepare for anything happening the next day, such as results.

What is your current assignment and primary responsibilities?

I work with my team to cover listed media companies which range from publishing firms to broadcasters to advertising agencies. Our job is to value and analyse these companies so that we can make a recommendation on them to both our external clients and our internal clients – the sales force and the traders.

Natasha
Analyst
Research Analyst Programme
London

Education
University – Manchester University
Degree – Economics